To Whom It May Concern:

It is a genuine pleasure for me to recommend a stellar employee and friend, Caleb L. Brewer. As Vice President of Information Systems, I've directly supervised Caleb over the past three years. As one of two systems administrators, Caleb helped form the heart of our IS department. A bright and capable individual, his hard work and dedication to excellence provided a source of pride upon which I often commented to colleagues in the industry. Caleb has proven himself time and again in almost any situation which an IT professional might encounter.

Three years ago, I hired Caleb to fill our entry-level network administrator position. He was literally a diamond in the rough; raw potential and ability that needed some testing, direction, and encouragement. He maintained a high level of professionalism and possessed writing skills that immediately caught the notice of our senior staff. I quickly promoted him to the senior network position which came open within one month of his arrival.

Caleb is a unique individual in that when you make suggestions on areas where he can improve; he takes those suggestions graciously and then applies them. While change doesn't happen overnight I have watched him develop in the areas of professionalism and communication into the seasoned professional that he is today. In his last performance review, Caleb was rated amongst the top performers in the organization.

While Caleb has a zest for life, I often had to tell him to go home as he's equally passionate about his work. Never one to shirk from a challenge, I could hand him any project and trust it would be completed successfully and on time. He was a go-to-guy in the Information Systems department. On numerous occasions he has received the personal thanks of our CEO and EVP for jobs well done.

While the list of Caleb's accomplishments is extensive, I will simply recap that he has been one of the smartest and most dedicated employees I've had the pleasure of working under me. It is with regret that I see him go to pursue the many consulting opportunities that someone with his unique skill set is positioned to take on. I was confident enough in his honesty, integrity, and consulting abilities that I vouched for Caleb to his first client, Zia Title, whose owners are personal acquaintances of mine. I wish him the best in pursuing his dreams of running a successful IT consulting company.

Bright, dedicated and skilled, Caleb garners my unequivocal recommendation. He would be a great asset for any company as a consultant.

Sincerely,

Kevin Murphy
